

WEEK IN REVIEW

From the BurnUp List from last week, things panned out pretty much how I thought. The Call to Action and Project & Portfolio were and are definitely the ones that took up the most time. Due to my daughter having a fever for the last 5 days and ended up having strep, I haven't really kept up on interacting with any of my peers. Managing my time this passed week has improved.

ANCHOR POINTS

Time was managed wisely this passed week and time was estimated pretty accurately according to my time estimation list. Time for Project & Portfolio went pretty smooth throughout the week. Starting work early for this week is what I am doing, and getting prepared for next week is next. Beginning my assignments early and not procrastinating has really helped me, not being stressed as much is definitely a plus. I am going to go about next week the same way.

REFLECT AND CONNECT

I have improved this week with my time; I actually got my Call to Action done, witch shouldn't really be a surprise, but I didn't procrastinate and I was able to finish it with a lot of time to spare. This week I am applying the same behavior. Getting my assignments in on time feels great, and knowing I did way ahead of time feels better.
